Re: Public Comment re irradiation labeling

My comment is that NO changes are needed in the regulations regarding irradiated food labeling, unless you want to consider making the required notices even larger than they are now. Irradiated foods are still new to consumers. It's not time to bury the notice regarding irradiation in the fine print; not yet. Prominent labeling is still needed to give consumers a meaningful choice among products and to alert them to this still different way of treating foods.

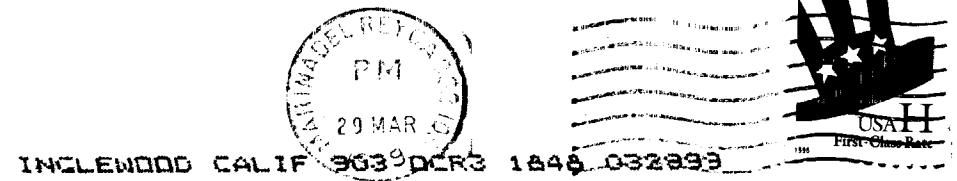

Thank you,
